Professional indemnity insurance for shipbrokers

Expert view

Shipbroking errors can be made as fast as negotiations can be conducted. The immediacy of electronic communication can often lead to expensive mistakes since detail may be missed in the haste, often driven by other parties, to close deals.

Whilst it may be self-evident that the fail-safe approach to errors is to check and cross-check; time pressures can often create less than perfect conditions for operational excellence. Examples of errors that might be encountered include:

- Corresponding with incorrect e-mail addresses
- Misdirected demurrage statements
- Negotiation errors
- Vessel or cargo wrongly described
- Breach of warranty of authority
- Acting for a non-existent principal

We've seen the problems before and we are here to help.

Any shipbroker will face day-to-day exposure to risk, but will be able to rely on ITIC to help reduce any potential hazards. To demonstrate potential liabilities in this sector, the following claims scenarios may be helpful.

Check before answering

A broker was acting for the owner of a vessel trading in the Mediterranean. When considering an offer from charterers, which included the term “time from 1700 Thursday or a day preceding a holiday until 0800 hours next working day not to count even if used” the owner asked the broker for the weekend working times in Algeria.

The broker answered the owner’s question without checking and got it wrong. The broker had advised the owner that the weekend working times were 1700 Thursday to 0800 Saturday, when in fact (as set out in BIMCO’s holiday calendar) the correct answer should have been 1700 Thursday to 0800 Sunday - a difference of 24 hours.

The owner agreed to the fixture following this negligent advice and had calculated the freight rate on the basis of the shorter period the broker had given. The vessel was delayed in port. The laytime commenced later than the owner anticipated and the eventual shortfall in demurrage was claimed from the broker.

The result of the longer than anticipated weekends was a claim of US$ 25,527 which was settled by ITIC. This is a classic example of how a claim could have been avoided if the broker had checked before answering.

Message on mobile - US$ 900,000

When fixing a tanker to carry vegoil the charterer asked whether the tanks had been washed. The owner’s broker telephoned the charterer’s broker to inform him that the tanks had been “washed but not fresh water rinsed”.

The charterer’s broker, who was contacted on his mobile phone while having lunch in a restaurant, mistook the message as being “fresh water washed”. Salt left on the tank walls from a seawater rinse contaminated the vegoil to the tune of US$ 900,000.

Take care who you are writing to

A number of claims against shipbrokers are caused by a failure to take care who a message is addressed to. One example is the broker using the “reply” button, instead of “forward” in email communication. The result being that an offer with a time limit was not passed on to the charterers, but sent back to the owners. When the time limit expired the owners fixed the ship to another charterer.

Sale and purchase business is not immune from this type of error. In a recent case, a ship had been sold but not yet delivered to the buyers. The seller’s broker received a speed and performance claim from the charterers. The ship had been fixed with the same charterers in direct continuation once the buyers took possession of the vessel. The sellers’ brokers mistakenly forwarded the claim to the buyers and not their clients, the sellers.

The buyers immediately became concerned whether the performance of the vessel would match the figures they had been given. The buyers’ lawyers sent a strongly worded message reserving their rights against the sellers for misrepresentation.

The sellers, of course, vehemently complained to their brokers.

Missed message

A shipbroker missed a message from owners explaining that the vessel they were fixing needed to inert tanks before loading. The message was therefore not seen by the charterers. The vessel was then fixed.

Once the vessel arrived it was apparent that the tanks needed inerting. A claim against the broker was made for loss of time of USD 30,000. Clear negligence on the part of the broker meant the claim was quickly paid.
